

A List of Characters Based off of Famous Chain Industries

Starbucks:

A brown-hair-dyed-black kinda girl with emerald green eyes and constant cat-eye makeup. Her skin under layers of concealer is spotted with freckles but she hides them well. Her square-rimmed glasses are more of a fashion statement than necessity and she holds an air of rebellious regality about her that catches the eye of every man that walks passed, but she doesn't notice any of them. The bottom half of her hair is shaved off, while the top half remains in a messy bun and her light brown roots are just starting to peak near her scalp. Her right arm is littered with tattoos of wolves and roses and even buffalo skulls all painted with hues of purple, and on her face, are two silver studs where her dimples indent. They're piercings that seem to sink into her skin when she smiles. She smells like coffee with a slight undertone of burnt sugar but she never leaves the house without her garnet (her birthstone) and silver ring given to her by her mother.

Coffee Bean and Tea Leaf:

Starbucks's twin. Her brown, frizzy hair is almost always tied into a half-ponytail with tons of little loose braids waterfalling down her ponytail. She is an environmentalist, health nut and animal rights activist with kind green eyes and a welcoming grin. However she doesn't wear as much makeup as Starbucks does so her freckles are visible on her skin, and the only kind of makeup she will wear is mascara. She constantly smells like cinnamon and chocolate but she's more bossy than her sister, due to her tendency to work extremely hard. Unlike her sister, she has no tattoos or piercings but despite their differences they get along very well. Coffee Bean tends to be a better cook than Starbucks, but Starbucks is the better artist. People can't help but be happy around her.

Barnes N Nobles:

An aspiring author. He's a middle aged man with salt-and-pepper hair. He usually wears circular, rimless 'Harry Potter' glasses and always seems to have the perfect amount of light grey 5 o'clock shadow misting his chin, jawline and upper lip.

His kind and tired stormy blue eyes is what catches people attention, but his intellect and fascination for typewriters is what draws people in. He loves to wear a green Tuxedo vest with a white flannel underneath, rolled at the sleeves, and a emerald green tie. The smell of leather and fresh paper always seems to waft around him and he carries around a light brown leather tote bag. He is a secret music-lover and has a pair of old-fashioned black earphones dangling from his neck. He doesn't shy away from social interaction, in fact he loves it and usually ends up inspiring everyone he talks to, but the one person who he's shy around is Starbucks; He has a little crush on her, and because of this, he usually carries around something green to try and catch her eye every once in a while.